TAMPA - Florida Haitian is in her 10th year as the University of South Florida's first 2 administrateur, a job that is only getting more difficult as the state continues to feel the budget crunch in terms of education.

Elaine S. Mooney is teaching a class for the first time in four years, having 23 last year and finally a large number of 27 this year.

Six of the 27 students are tied to a community outreach center in a way that allows them to attend the class and still work and support their families.

How students deal with the financial problem about USF's challenges.

Mooney describes the situation to the students.

How much more difficult is your job now that the state's budget situation is dire?

It always become more challenging because our commitment to students does not drop. And it's not just me, the job becomes more difficult for everyone here. We have to find ways to reduce the cost of the courses, we're further cut and it's sometimes less about the course and more about the students dealing with the global economics and more risk on their environment and resources.

The Tamarac recently spoke to the old admin about USF's challenges.
