An open discussion forum to enable advanced study of current theories and concepts. This course examines leadership in historical and contemporary African contexts, focusing on the roles of global leaders, the competencies required for effective leadership, and the ethical dimensions of leadership.

The major social, political, legal, ethical, and cultural dimensions of leadership are explored, with particular attention to the African continent. Students will develop an understanding of the historical and contemporary challenges faced by African leaders, and the ethical principles that guide their actions.

This course is designed to provide a comprehensive overview of the leadership process, including the identification of leadership styles, the development of leadership skills, and the application of leadership principles in diverse organizational contexts. Through the examination of real-life examples, students will gain a deeper understanding of the complexities of leadership and the ethical considerations involved.

This course will focus both on drafting skills and the legal framework of leadership. Students will learn how to navigate the complex regulatory environment of leadership, including the ethical and legal implications of leadership roles and responsibilities.

Ethical considerations and value judgments are central to the study of leadership, and this course will explore the ethical dilemmas faced by leaders in various organizational contexts. Through case studies and discussions, students will develop a critical understanding of leadership ethics and the role of ethics in leadership practice.

Leadership and innovation in the workplace are critical topics in today's rapidly changing business environment. This course will explore the role of leaders in facilitating innovation, including the identification of innovation opportunities, the development of innovative strategies, and the implementation of innovative solutions.

Particular emphasis is placed on leadership in healthcare settings, including the challenges of leadership in the healthcare industry and the ethical considerations involved. Through case studies and discussions, students will gain a deeper understanding of leadership in healthcare and the role of ethics in leadership practice.

Business ethics and sustainability are increasingly important in today's business landscape. This course will explore the ethical dimensions of sustainability, including the role of leadership in promoting sustainable practices and the legal and ethical implications of sustainability initiatives.

Leadership and innovation in the workplace are critical topics in today's rapidly changing business environment. This course will explore the role of leaders in facilitating innovation, including the identification of innovation opportunities, the development of innovative strategies, and the implementation of innovative solutions.

Ethical considerations and value judgments are central to the study of leadership, and this course will explore the ethical dilemmas faced by leaders in various organizational contexts. Through case studies and discussions, students will develop a critical understanding of leadership ethics and the role of ethics in leadership practice.

Leadership and innovation in the workplace are critical topics in today's rapidly changing business environment. This course will explore the role of leaders in facilitating innovation, including the identification of innovation opportunities, the development of innovative strategies, and the implementation of innovative solutions.

Ethical considerations and value judgments are central to the study of leadership, and this course will explore the ethical dilemmas faced by leaders in various organizational contexts. Through case studies and discussions, students will develop a critical understanding of leadership ethics and the role of ethics in leadership practice.

Leadership and innovation in the workplace are critical topics in today's rapidly changing business environment. This course will explore the role of leaders in facilitating innovation, including the identification of innovation opportunities, the development of innovative strategies, and the implementation of innovative solutions.

Ethical considerations and value judgments are central to the study of leadership, and this course will explore the ethical dilemmas faced by leaders in various organizational contexts. Through case studies and discussions, students will develop a critical understanding of leadership ethics and the role of ethics in leadership practice.