

Child and Family Journal of Innovative Practice and Research Submission Guidelines

Child and Family Journal for Innovative Practice and Research (“CFJ”) is a publication providing an integrated practice-research platform for all child and family programs, agencies, and institutions in the United States and globally to share child welfare innovative practice and research experiences. It aims to provide updated information of innovative practice and research for promoting child and family well-being from diverse communities, universities, and clinical or research centers. Scholars and practitioners working with children and families are our contributors to share knowledge, innovative assessment and intervention, practice insights, service outcomes, policy updates, and professional and educational development sources statewide, nationally, and internationally.

Prepare for Your Papers

The CFJ values summaries or progress reports of any form focusing on child and family services, such as short stories, case studies, poems, personal or professional reflections, artwork, photos, book reviews, and other innovative work with significant impact on children and youth. All publications must reflect the core values and ethics of social work. Submissions and publications are made online without additional cost or compensation to the contributors. Contributors must include a statement in an email that their attached submission is their original work not considered or published in other sources. All submissions should be no more than two single-spaced pages (inclusive of references cited according to the APA 7th Edition style).

Peer-Review and Ethics

CFJ Editorial Board is committed to peer-review integrity and upholding the highest standards of the review procedure. All submissions will be emailed to the Editor-in-Chief to assess suitability. The qualified works will then be sent to anonymous reviewers. After the peer-review complete, the editorial board will send comments and result to the authors. Once the new issue is published, the editorial board will send the publication information to the authors.

Submission and Contact Information

Monit Cheung, Ph.D., LCSW, Editor-in-Chief, CFJ
University of Houston
mcheung@uh.edu